

Slave of Aragonite

I am a servant of Mistress Aragonite Frigidpaws, and I am here to tell you what she is like and about her past. Like, a biography. Yes? Take a seat, it might take a while.

Aragonite was one of the few chosen by our God Arceus to live after his Last Judgment. This gift was only given to those with the purest souls. All who were chosen were humans before they turned into what they are now. These humans acknowledged their souls were trapped inside a vessel; the human body. Arceus made many different souls when He created the universe. The human soul however, developed wrong traits and corrupted, and managed to dominate the other souls. The God set up an experiment to see which of His creations still had a pure, pristine soul. Since all souls were trapped inside human bodies, He could not see who still had a clean soul. With this experiment, He could easily keep track of how much a person had sinned and how much their soul was tainted with corruption. Only a few lucky managed to keep their soul unscathed from harm. The ones with a human soul oppressed and dominated the others, even though they were of the same species. Arceus thought the time was ripe for a mass cleanup, and sent a message to the small group that He found worthy.

The ones who received the God's message reacted differently. They realized life as they knew it would change, very soon. They were given ten days to do as they desired, as they had always sacrificed themselves for others. Arceus prepared the apocalypse on the background and assured the selected were not bothered by others. The chosen were smart enough not to spread the word of their God's destruction, as that would either cause a lot of trouble or they would be labelled as doomsayers. While they enjoyed everything that life could give, the days counted in the back of their heads. Arceus's chosen were scattered all over the planet. At the end of the tenth day, their heads were pointed towards forgotten shrines. They prayed, thankful that Lord Arceus had selected them. As the clock hit 24:00, the God exiled them from Earth to another place, and commenced the beginning of the end of life in the universe. He desired a new, fresh world, and thus created a new universe, where He could place His children in peace.

The universe He created did not have intelligent life forms yet. He commanded His children to build a society without corruption and deceit. The planet the chosen were sent upon was fertile and full of lush forests. There was an abundance of food, water and raw materials, to support the life of the chosen. They were given the task to build up a society, and were thus granted with an extended life. In addition to that, they were transformed into the being trapped inside their human vessel back on Earth, and were given special powers belonging to that creature. The planet was around twice as large as Earth, had a pleasant temperature and a good atmosphere. The memories of his children were wiped clean, and only their belief and willpower drove them to complete their task. However, due the size of the planet, none of them managed to ever meet each other, except two of them.

It was a rare coincidence. Their rendezvous was predetermined, they assumed. Arceus had abandoned His children and watched from the seat of the universe how everything was working out. His strength had run out and He was unable to act for a very long time. Fortunately everything worked out well, eventually. The two got along well and did not take long to understand how to communicate. They were a dragon and an arctic fox. They were exceptionally intelligent and, once they established an accommodation, started to capture and do research on other, non-intelligent beings. They quickly learned that every animal they examined had a decent amount of intelligence imprinted into their brains, and that with a little bit of effort they could actually educate them. That was when the two realized these creatures had a lot of potential. But careful not to teach them bad things, the fox took a very radical decision.

The dragon and the fox had many arguments and their hatred towards each other grew. The dragon was not content with the decision his companion had made. It was then, when the fox cut the rope. She enslaved the dragon using the powers given to her by Arceus, without further ado. The dragon was rebellious at first, but realized the fox did not mean any harm, and her way of education would erase any kind of evil. The dragon himself was rinsed of all the hatred that took control of him before he became the fox's servant. He obeyed every command given to him, trusting his Mistress entirely. He became her first slave. They were around fifteen years old during this event. Soon after the dragon finished his education, he started to bring in more and more 'students'. During the dragon's education, the fox learned how to control water freely. She could bring the temperature below 20K, and cloaked herself into permafrost. She cryo-froze herself to put an end to aging. The fox became immortal. Her body adapted itself to the extreme cold temperature and useful way to heat itself. She promised the dragon she would make him immortal once he fully understood the world. The fox prayed years to Arceus when He answered her call. She pled to him, to send her first slave back to earth, years before He destroyed it. This would give the dragon more time to understand the world, and moreover, himself. Arceus saw the usefulness in this plan and decided to execute it. Without a proper goodbye, the fox and the dragon were separated. The God summoned the old universe, which was particularly annihilated. He turned back time inside that universe, hundred years before He destroyed it. Then, he put the soul of the dragon inside a newborn human. His parents glanced happily upon him and smiled, happy with the birth of a second child.

The fox remained on the new planet with the many servants she owned, trying to suppress her sadness. She wouldn't see the dragon for many years, she acknowledged. But it was better for him, as he was not ready for that world yet. Arceus promised the fox He would return the dragon as soon as he completed his life as a human. That said, the God returned to His throne, where he could keep a good eye on both worlds. Though, in mind her slave would return as soon as he completed his life, soothed her. She would see him, and they could spend time together again. She looked forward to that moment, that day, but she also hoped the dragon's stay helped.

It is now 35 years after Arceus's Last Judgment. Two universes exist at the same moment. Somewhere, somewhere where none of this place will ever go lives a human with the soul of a dragon that once dwelled this world. The Mistress has expanded the establishment during the absence of the dragon and has dedicated herself to training slaves full-time. Her treatment is harsh and extremely violent, but this teaches the servants full commitment and obedience. It is one way to achieve the God's wish, as this erases any root of evil inside the slaves. Other animals are not given the chance to develop intelligence unless educated, and thus are all slaves held within a certain area. If someone finds a suitable animal within the area, it is brought immediately to the Mistress. She will then decide whether it can be educated or not. There is no possibility for evil to root on this planet, and I know the Mistress will keep it that way.
