Priding himself as a ladies' man and a member of a species common in the Northern half of Triston, Kevin is known amongst the populace of Weron for his quite outgoing, although not outspoken personality. He remains devoted to achieving as much as he possibly can in his life, although he wields a quite rapacious appetite for women whether they are members of his species or not and thinks close to nothing of relationships with multiple women at once. As such, he is a frequent visitor to the many night clubs in the district, one of which he worked at as a bartender for a brief period before he departed to pursue a career in computer science.

Working as an assistant at one of the many electronics shops dotted around Hafna City, he takes every day in his stride and remains a confident and eloquent creature, although much to his distaste, some have called attention to his past. He had been in a relationship with a gold and pale blue kitsune named Jackie for several months and the two had been deeply in love.

But while it seemed like everything he could ever have wanted, soon his desire to drift returned. He soon found himself taking a liking to another kitsune, Christine McLeish, who had brought in her laptop to be repaired. While it had at first seemed like a routine job, he couldn't help but fall for her and soon he found that she was appearing in his dreams. Eventually he asked her out and then brought her back to his home.

However, Jackie soon found out and viciously attacked both him and Christine when she spotted them linking paws and kissing. Due to this, Jackie, who later met and married a fox attending her college, refused to speak to him from that point, and Christine soon terminated the relationship. However, he was quick to put his loss aside and began seeking love once more.

Kevin tends to be a very easy person to get on with, although in the right environment he can be very flirty around women, particularly members of his species or other caninus families. He stands at almost six and a half feet tall, though his appearance, despite his kind nature, has proven to be rather intimidating to some others. Black fur coats his body, with fur of a deep crimson the colour of blood surrounding each of his paws and his chest, with the pads of his paws and nose being the same tone of crimson. His open T-shirt and jeans each match the colour of his hair, flowing over his shoulders and black in colour.

Despite his fearsome appearance, it is rare for him to become angry or react with violence, and he possesses the trait of being able to explain himself out of a lot of the scenarios his life throws at him. Indeed, his lack of will to engage in physical engagement has drawn ridicule from friends and foes alike, particularly from his closer friends. He is often seen with a pale blue Luccani Katana motorbike, and he regards it as among his most treasured possessions. He also uses the bike for occasional street racing, and when he isn't hanging around in night clubs or looking for love, he can usually be found at the city's rodeo or at the casino. In the time he spends at home, he enjoys soap operas and talk shows as well as strategy video games.
