Hailing from North Archeria and carrying Canadian heritage, this large and well built Newfoundland Labrador can say that he has lived a rather fulfilling life with many ups and downs along the way. Chad's passengers and the city folk know him for his very outgoing and social nature, and he is particularly willing to strike a conversation with his passengers. Despite having never remained in one job for long, he has remained determined to chase the unknown, even if they have proven detrimental to him or run the risk of getting into hot water with his bosses, over which he has lost several jobs.

Several sides to him exist. While some creatures see him as a perfect gentleman, some others consider him very flirtatious due to his efforts in searching for love following his divorce from his former high school sweetheart Julie as a result of them growing apart. As a result, he is frequently involved in relationships, and only a few of them have lasted for longer than a few months.

His reputation for chasing women is also cemented by the fact that both of his teenage sons Dominic and Carl, who closely resemble him, have inherited his tendency to play the game of love, and have already had several girlfriends of varying species each. Despite this, he knows when to pull out his cards and when not to try flirting, doing so only in situations which he believes will benefit him, and he also knows how to convincingly talk his way out of embarrassing or compromising situations.

Indeed, while he finds these inherently useful abilities, it has not always worked in his favour. His record carries a conviction for insurance fraud, for just before he married his ex wife in 1992, they were involved in the theft and destruction of her car with the intention of cashing in on the sizeable insurance payout they would be able to claim. When they tried to claim the money, they were soon found out, for Chad had been seen parking the car on a railway line, and the oncoming train had only just been able to stop in time. Both of them were fined and sentenced to one year in prison, but their love remained undiminished.

After their release, he got together with some of his former classmates and formed a folk band they named Intimacy, due to the passionate and sometimes sexual nature of their lyrics. Although they quickly went on to become one of the most famous musical acts in the whole of North Triston, disagreements between his fellow bandmates meant that this dream was not to last for very long, and they released three albums before disbanding in 1999. Chad and his family soon moved to Topi in order for him to chase out an opportunity to get his paws into WCS' personal computer division, although he has never encountered or been in touch with his former bandmates since that time. Indeed, this job lasted for even less time, for he was fired upon being caught stealing from one of the safes.

Chad can be described as being married to his current job due to his love for driving and travelling, which first surfaced during a job he had as a courier. As a result of this, he has seen a lot of both halves of the island, and has picked up extensive knowledge about the aspects of each half's societies, as well as many of the major cities. In particular, he knows his way around the capital cities of each half, Topi in the North and Borna City in the South.

He is a very tall, broad and well built Newfoundland Labrador, black fur coating his body with a head of black hair to match. It is said that his brown eyes, often compared to the shade of garnets, poorly disguise how he feels whenever he talks with women, something that his ex wife does admit drew her in when they first met. While they remain on good terms and he gets on well with her new boyfriend, she dislikes the frequency at which he tries to pick women up because of the effect it has had on their sons. Indeed, he can be overconfident and too trusting of women, which on occasion has led to him being taken advantage of or embroiled in their troubles.

He is often said not to learn from his mistakes, for even when the estranged husband of a woman he'd had a fling with tried to kill him, he still continued to meet up with her despite the threat to his life, until she decided to call the relationship off. When he's not looking for his next fling, he enjoys fine wines and is very enthusiastic about theatre performances, particularly ones dealing with romance. He is also an accomplished chef and while he hasn't had to do this as part of a job for many years, he often relies on it to impress others. Moreover, he dreams of one day owning his own company, although he has never decided on precisely what sort of company he wants it to be.
