

Marriage is pointless
I really don't get the point of marriage. Like really, it's a pointless, religious construct. Honestly, I would rather just date. When you get married, what changes about your relationship? The only thing that changes is that you're now called:

"husband and wife" not "boyfriend and girlfriend". That's really it, nothing else really changes relationship-wise.
They say it's supposed to be about commitment. Can't you be in a committed relationship and not be married?

I would love to be in a romantic relationship with a woman but not be married. I don't need a piece of paper to make my relationship with my significant other "official" or meaningful. I'm also an atheist, and as an atheist, I see marriage as too religious of a construct for me to want to follow through on.

I also can't stand weddings, the bride is the center of attention and the groom is an afterthought at his own wedding. Weddings cost too much fucking money, according to nerdwallet.com, the average cost of an american wedding in 2022 was $29,195.00,

HOLY-FUCKING-SHIT!!! At weddings, the bride is basically the center of attention, and the groom is an afterthought. The ceremony doesn't officially start until the bride is good and ready and don't get me fucking started on that "here comes the bride" song.

Divorce laws also favor women too much, if you're a man entering a divorce court there may as well be a sign that says "To all men, abandon all hope, ye who enters here". My own parents divorced when I was little and I'd rather not go through that, especially because as a man, I'd just get screwed, alimony, child support if you have kids, and half your stuff gets taken from you. Marriage only benefits the woman, especially when the marriage gets terminated. If you're a man, marriage is a raw deal for you and just isn't worth it. Alright, I've said my peace, I'm done but I'll probably do a comic in Vulpine Vibes with Chris being my mouth piece.