

Far into the future humans have developed an advanced microorganism to combat diseases. Though further research have also seen mutations taking place and transforming them into animal/human hybrids. They have been deemed unfit to live in human society and are treated like animals despite their ability of speech and more human emotions. Though as life went as normal for the humans the microorganism designed to help humans goes haywire and starts to infect humans with a disease that becomes impossible to cure due to its advanced intelligence and ability to adapt to any cure and disease. The human race is quickly killed off by it but the animal/human hybrids are able to survive due to their newfound immunity to the disease and start their own societies. The world is split up into three locations for each type of animal: A land for regular land animals, an ocean for all underwater creatures and others that live on the coasts, and a land for bugs to live out their lives. Remains of human society are scattered throughout the new land like holding tanks, canisters, and even whole cities. In the bug world there are both males and females but in the other two worlds there are no males. The females reproduce thanks to a special plant that gives them a fertile egg to carry. Every animal can become pregnant and give birth.

Animal land is pretty straight forward and it seems nothing has changed aside from the new animal women living on the land. There are plenty of different environments like deserts, forests, and jungles. The land is located northwest next to bug land and above underwater land. The underwater land is covered entirely in an ocean with a few rare islands here and there for the costal animals. The underwater has many shipwrecks and sunken cities of many kinds allowing treasure hunters much to find. The land is south underneath the bug and animal lands. The bug world is certainly the most bizarre as the land is home to the bugs. The land has incredibly large plants to make the bugs still feel like their small. The land also has deserts and forests along with ancient temples and ruins. The land itself is located southeast next to the animal land and above the underwater one.
