Biography

Frederick Rogers was born in the southern part of the United States in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. He was the eldest of two with his younger sister, Felicia Rogers, born 2 years later. Ironically enough, she was born on the exact same date as Frederick. At first, Frederick didn't think too much about his sister, but treated her well. When Felicia was six years old, however, she developed a nasty case of pneumonia and nearly perished from the disease. Frederick was beside himself after he nearly lost his little sister.

Thankfully, their parents were able to get some of the best medical care in the area and Felicia's life was saved by the doctors. Frederick was impressed by their expertise and the technology they used to save her life. At that moment on, Frederick decided to pursue a career in science and technology.

His relationship with Felicia had also changed after she got better. He kept an eye on her and was sweet to her. Throughout his grade school, he kept his nose to the books, eventually graduating at the top of his class. Surprisingly, Felicia had followed a similar pursuit as well and graduated along the same lines as he did. Frederick was accepted into the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he went on to obtain both a bachelor's and Master of Science. However, his personality had changed after he graduated. For reasons unknown, he had slipped into a depression and had isolated himself from co-workers and friends. His sister had heard what was going on and visited him to help him heal.

For the next four years, Frederick had worked as part of a technology institute within Boston. In the middle of his tenure, Felicia joined him at his workplace and the two were able to develop a working prototype for what would become their forte of robotics. The two of them saved up enough money to move out of Massachusetts and arrived at Colmaton, California. They pooled their resources together and opened the Rogers Biotech Institute in 2013. They introduced their line of robotic artificial limbs to help provide new means of mobility for the handicapped. Eventually, the two siblings introduced a series of robotic fursons for wealthy patrons. What was amazing about these machines were how realistic they look, appearing as though they were living breathing fursons.

Unknowns to others, however, the siblings had a hidden agenda...

Frederick Rogers harbored resentment and anger towards super powered fursons (aka supers) and believed they were a threat to the planet. He planned to teach supers what their actual place were. His army of personal androids, dubbed Stinkroids, obeys his beck and call, while the madman plots the end of supers...

Personality

Frederick Rogers shows a great deal of intelligence in the field of science, particularly technology and biology. However, he suffers from a large ego and tends to be tripped up by his hubris. He holds a deep grudge against all supers regardless of whether they are villains or heroes and wishes to bring an end to them through humiliation or other means necessary. However, he will not hesitate to help civilians and refuses to harm them. He does bare some respect for individuals practicing scientific fields. He is very caring for his sister despite getting into little spats with her from time to time.

Abilities

Frederick Rogers holds a great deal of expertise in technology, allowing him to design various machines to torment supers. His pride and joy, the Stinkroids, is the workhorse of his operations. Their abilities can be used to torment and humiliate supers, such as using foul smelling sprays on others. He also creates weapons such a mechanized suits and lasers to defend his person. During his time in Massachusetts, he learned kickboxing and will use it if necessary.
