

Stephen was once a human who dreamt of being a dragon living in a world of magic and wonder. Part of his wish is granted when the beings referred to as "mystics" are forced to reveal themselves to the world, though tis a dream somewhat hampered by the fact that these mystics come not as the majestic beings they are to him but as refugees not quite wanted in human society. It is a fateful meeting with a sorceress named Eris that the second part of his wish is granted, but only through pain and suffering as what was supposed to be a gift is quickly turned into a curse.

Now a gold dragoness and taking on the name Mehlaphuse she strives to survive in a world that fears and rejects her kind. Fortunately she isn't alone as she strives to find a new place in the world alongside her friend Dafydd and her lover Ravtrag also changed by the sorceress, an old wizard named Jergo who is more than he lets on, and other allies she will make on her journey.

Peril follows the dragoness with every step as Eris follows Mehl's every step, creating mayhem in her wake and seeking to bring the world into eternal strife. With such a threat hot on their tail Mehl and those that follow her have no choice but to stop the mad witch if they are to survive and find peace in the world.

The world has forever changed and a new sun is rising in the horizon.
