

The sounds of the early morning breeze crept into one wolf's family home. Within the room, the comforts of her warm bed were enough to keep the young one fast asleep, drifting her away within deep dreams. Her body was lying down on top of the sheets, snuggled into the bed with content.

The sound of a creeping door broke the peace and quiet. A wet nose poking out from the door crack as it sniffed the air. More and more did the nose come out... the door opening wide open. Standing in its path is the wolf's little brother. The early sunlight shining some into his fur that glowed a bit of his color. He tilted his head up to hearing the snores of his sister.

Turning around, lying at his footpaws, was a little cupcake with a lit candle. With a little grunt, he picked up the treat... and walked on over to the sleepy wolf. Reaching the foot of the bed, he raised up the cupcake with all his strength, and tried to wake her up.

The wolf jerked back onto her tummy... panting wildly as she woke up violently, looking all over as fear consumed her. She took a few breaths... and calmed herself down. And looked down at the floor.
