

Out in the dusty rocky desert with the cloudy sky colored brown by the sunset, a wandering lone man was walking through the desert. He was 23-years-old and has black-hair, brown-eyes, and medium-toned skin. He wore a red-sleeved shirt underneath his black steel armor with spiky shoulder pads and boots. Attached to the back of the armor was a brown cape with rips and tears at the end. The man without a name, whom most people referred to as No Name, and with an unknown past walked on and on through the desert as he passed a small flock of turkey vultures flying through the sky. After he passed under a rocky archway, a loud noise suddenly boomed. No Name instantly halted and brought his gauntlet-covered hands up to his ears to cover them and block out most of the sound. A portal began to appear right in front of him as the noise began to slowly die out. In the portal were two animated images; one was that of a reddish-blond-haired man fighting a blue-haired girl, and the other was that of two teenagers in a dark room that had been brightened by the portal's light. The baby blue-haired girl seemed to be pointing at No Name, and from the way her lips were moving, the man could tell that she was asking her blond-haired companion who he was. When the boy tried to answer that question, the portal started to suck No Name and the two teens inside it. The armored man and the screaming teenagers flew in high speed through the purple zone-way of the portal.

Glacies cried out frantically, "Zephyr, what's going on here?!"

Zephyr, being just as scared as the girl next to him, asked, "How am I supposed to know?! It's not like I've been through one of these before." The apprentices were both unaware of No Name who was following behind them through the portal.

No Name, being a man of a few words and most of the time quiet, just stayed silent looked ahead of himself to see where they were going. The portal was taking them to the place where the red blonde and the darker-haired blunette were fighting.

Glacies said, "Hey, it looks like we're about to go into their world."

Zephyr said, "Yeah, it seems like it." Then the three people reached the end of the portal where they entered into another world.