Chapter 10

Link and Sidon stirred as the morning sun's rays shined upon them. The two lovers had fallen asleep in each other's arms, unaware of having fallen asleep in the first place. Link was the first to awaken. He rubbed the sleep out of his eyes and gazed affectionately at Sidon, who was still stirring but not quite awake.

Link leaned over and kissed him tenderly on the cheek, eliciting a peaceful smile on his face as he woke up.

"Good morning, darling. Is this the way you intend to wake me up every morning?" Sidon asked jokingly.

Link stroked Sidon's head fins. "I might."

Sidon chuckled as he pulled Link close, planting his lips against his. The two French kissed for several moments before separating and getting up on their feet. Both stood there butt naked and still half covered in Sidon's copious amount of semen.

"I guess we better find the nearest river and clean up before we move on." Sidon recommended.

"Way ahead of you. The nearest one is south of here a little ways just past the path that leads over a bridge. Sure hope no one is down there to see us." Link said as he put on the bare minimum of clothes.

Sidon's attire was routinely worn on land and in water, so being soaked in cum made little difference. He looked over the edge of the tower. "It's a long way down from here..."

Link took out his paraglider. "Not if we fly there directly."

A look of apprehension played across the Zora's face. "Er, I dunno Link. Zoras may be built for water and land, but we certainly aren't made for flying."

Link held his hand out to him. "Do you trust me?"

Sidon looked at him for a moment before taking it. “Yes, love. I trust you. It’s gravity I don’t trust.”

Link let go of Sidon’s hand and opened the paraglider. “Just hold on to me real tight. Our combined weight means we won’t be in the air for long, but it’ll still get us there a lot quicker.”

Link led Sidon onto the ledge facing the nearby river. The much taller Zora held Link tightly by the waist with apprehension as he held the paraglider above them.

Link looked at him. “Given your height, you’d best just hold me up and use me as an extension of the paraglider itself while I hold onto it. Get ready to jump with me on three. One...two...three!”

Sidon took a deep breath and leapt over the edge, as the paraglider expanded to ride the air. Sidon was holding Link so tight, he wasn’t far from crushing him. Link immediately regretted the idea as he had to use all his strength to hold onto the paraglider while supporting Sidon’s weight. Nevertheless, the two sailed over the trees below and down towards the river. As predicted, they were losing altitude quicker than if Link were flying alone.

He had never seen Sidon so terrified before. Unable to focus on anything else, Link guided them across the walkway and soon landed them on the bank of the river. No sooner did Sidon’s feet touch the ground, did he drop to his hands and knees, grateful to be in contact with the ground again.

Link rushed to stow away his paraglider before putting a hand over Sidon’s back.

“Honey. I’m so sorry. I should’ve realized that wasn’t exactly the best idea.” Link said sincerely.

Sidon stood back up. “For sure. Yes, let’s not do that again.”

Link proceeded to jump into the water and float there as he cleaned the cum off of him while Sidon followed suit. Once in the water, Sidon quickly became much more relaxed.

“Sidon. I...” Link began to say.

Sidon rapidly swam over and touched two fingers to Link’s lips.

Link nodded. “Right.”

The two floated in the water for a couple minutes before finally climbing out. Now cleaned up, Link put on his Champion’s tunic and Hylian pants. Suddenly, he froze. Sidon noticed this.

“What’s wrong?” Sidon asked.

Link pointed behind him, prompting Sidon to turn in the direction Link was facing. His jaw almost dropped when he saw the giant yellow dragon, Farosh. The dragon was flying serenely several dozen feet above the landscape, emitting several balls of yellow electricity that flew in different directions, fading into nothing after several feet. While Link had seen him and his other two kin several times, he never got tired of their majestic beauty.

“Oh wow. That’s an amazing dragon. I happened to see Naydra from a distance once, but the mountain air was too cold to go any closer.” Sidon said.

Sidon looked at Link, who looked back.

“I’ve never told you this, but there have been times that I’ve envied you. In your travels, you’ve no doubt been to every corner of Hyrule while I’ve hardly scratched the surface beyond the Lanayru region itself. As the prince of the Zoras, I have many responsibilities to my people next to my father. It’s not often that I go out on missions. The truth is there were times I wished I could just discard my title and go on a journey of my own.” Sidon confessed.

Link listened intently and then took his hand after he finished talking.

“If it makes you feel any better, the land was a very dangerous place then; even for me. The majority of the Hylians were wiped out in the initial onslaught of Ganon’s forces as I’m sure you know. Zora’s Domain was one of the select few areas that survived that massacre.” Link explained.

Sidon nodded. “You’re right, of course. I can still remember my foolish attempt to face down a Lynel as he led an army against my people, which thankfully was repelled. Heh, Mipha gave me quite the scolding for that while at the same time praising my bravery. There are monsters still out there, but without Ganon’s evil magic influencing them, perhaps the danger is now adequately mitigated.”

After a brief silence, Link spoke up. “Perhaps Zora’s Domain can do without their prince for a few days. I mean now that you and I are bonded, they’re gonna have to know about this sooner or later. A lot will change because of this.”

Sidon looked absentmindedly into the distance.

“Yeah, they must know. The irony, I think, is that I don’t believe anyone ever knew or suspected you and I this way. They see the Hylian Champion make his stops at the domain for supplies and rest while talking with their prince, but that’s about the extent of it.”

Link smirked in spite of himself.

“Oh I’m certain there’s at least one Zora who’s noticed it.” Link said, remembering his conversation with Kodah.

“It’ll be quite the announcement: The Zora Prince and the Hylian Hero, officially mates. Could be quite the scandal. Hahahaha!!” Sidon laughed.

Link squeezed Sidon’s hand. “Well, however they handle the news, it won’t change a thing between us. My future is with you now. I hope you never grow tired of hearing me say this but...I love you.”

Sidon kneeled down to Link's level and took both his hands into his.

"I love you too, my dear sweet Link. I won't ever grow tired of hearing those words if you don't." Sidon smiled his wonderful smile.

Link wrapped his arms around Sidon's neck as the two kissed deeply. Despite knowing they needed to move on, both of them fought the temptation to make love with each other right then and there. Their lips parted as the two sighed happily.

"I guess we better get a move-on." Sidon said, his forehead resting against Link's.

"Yeah. Hehehe." Link chuckled quietly.

Sidon stood to full height and took out the Fireproof Elixir as Link took out his Sheikah Slate.

"So six minutes each, you said; correct?" Sidon asked.

"That's right. Assuming you down each subsequent elixir down as the previous one starts to wear off, that means we'll have twenty-four minutes to get in, scan the Eldin Region, search if the Sensor+ detects the stone and get out. You won't have to drink that until we arrive, since the tower sits just outside of the temperature extremes. Are you ready?" Link asked.

"Let's do this." Sidon said with confidence.

Link selected Eldin Tower on the map, then tapped 'Travel' as the two floated off the ground and dematerialized.
