The background of the title card has videos of foliage of forests

Cuts to a garden with a field in the background

Text: We have new plants for today that I brought from the Treeshroud forest. They look weird.

A silhouette of a Morpeko carrying pots approaches the camera. The new plants on the pots have strange shapes

Text: I studied as I can to find out what they are like, it was given the name Nature's Mockery. An odd and unpleasant name for plants like these.

The Morpeko puts the plants at her garden. She seems to be struggling to keep them upright but gives up and leaves

Text: I found a startling discovery of these plants they do not need soil for some reason. They need something organic from them. However, I tried fruits they do not seem to do the work.

Cuts to a different angle of the garden with the planets seem to be fully grown except for Nature's Mockery

Text: I received a message from an anonymous tip it said that the plant even does not need pots to grow on, which can make sense why it doesn't need soil.

A low howl is heard

Cuts to the camera in an urban setting, the camera man is shown to be the Morpeko. And another cut to a field with her house in the distance, the Morpeko walks on the dirt road and then finally garden. The Nature's Mockery seemed to have grown

Text: At nighttime I swear I heard a howl outside. It woke me up and every time I check for the source, I could not find it. After a week I am still hearing noises outside my house. I woke up the next day and found a disturbing sight.

Cuts to the garden with the plants in full view. She takes a look at a weird shape of the plant; she looks closer to reveal an eerie outline of a Lucario skull on the plant. The outline's jaw moves slowly up and down. The branches of the plant began to move. The Morpeko botanist runs away

Now it shows Nature's Mockery growth time-lapse in different angles. The face of the Lucario is seen briefly, it seems like it is trying to morph with plant's physiology moving left and right, rarely disappearing on the screen

Text: I decided to call a moving company as the hallucinations are getting worse. I moved at the end of the 14th week. The hallucinations stopped.

The planet's branches suddenly grew longer and longer to point it touched camera on the southwest point. All the cameras are now moved away carefully by the Morpeko and with help of the moving company's 2 workers

Text: I visited my house yesterday. It was covered in branches and hallucinations are becoming worse when I stepped closer. Luckily was still alive as I decided to hastily leave at least the sounds stopped.
