

In a dense forest, three monkey Pokemon lived together in somewhat of a family. A Panpour, a Pansear, and a Pansage all lived in a big tree and ate berries every day. They were a bit gluttonous, which made it a good thing their forest was so full of berry trees and bushes.

They were all rather short, which was why they kept to themselves. They didn't want predators thinking little pan Pokemon like them were easy pickings, which they were. They often daydreamed of being bigger - much, MUCH bigger. Fantasies were fantasies, though.

Or so they thought. A little Pokemon occasionally saw them playing, pretending to be giants, and got amusement out of watching their fun. She decided to make their fantasy a reality.

One morning, the three Pokemon awoke to a strange sight - their tree had produced some strange fruit. It was unlike any other they'd ever seen. There was an Oran berry tree, so there was no way it could produce this fruit that looked nothing like Orans.

There were only three of the fruits in the entire tree, which the three Pans learned after thoroughly searching the whole thing. Funnily enough, the fruits had bloomed just in front of their sleeping spot. Could these have been delivered to them as a gift? They couldn't have been though... Not if they were attached to the tree.

They were clueless as to where these berries came from, but none of them would let good fruit go to waste. They each took one fruit and ate it. The berry had a surprisingly dull flavor - not sweet, sour, bitter, spicy, or dry - just... bland.

With that out of the way, the three began their usual day of searching the forest for different berries to eat. Given how many different kinds of berries were in the forest, it was easy to change up daily meals. They took a few berries from one bush, stripped a few other bushes to let them grow more. Then they climbed into a tree and started scarfing down berries.

One of them noticed something. The berries they were eating were much smaller than usual. In fact, the whole tree felt like it had shrunk. They often ate from this tree and its foliage was never this thick.

Pansage dismounted from the tree and looked around. Everything felt... smaller. Pansage looked up at his bros in the tree continuing to eat. They seemed... bigger? Pansage watched as his gluttonous brothers kept eating. Every now and again, when he got a good look at them, he couldn't help but think they were bigger than before.

When the tree was stripped of resources, they jumped down from the tree. Somehow, they both were bigger than Pansage! This morning they were the exact same height, as they'd been their whole lives together. Something had happened.

Pansage asked his brothers to wait whilst he stripped a nearby bush. They were confused, but they humored him. Pansage raided some of the nearby bushes and scarfed their contents. To his brothers' surprise, he slowly but surely grew before their eyes!

They decided to conclude that the berries they had this morning were responsible for this. There was literally no other explanation. Their fantasy was coming true.

They began to grow curious - they had tripled their size now, how big could they grow? They started to tear through the forest, stripping every tree and bush of their fruits until the forest was bare. True to their fantasies, they continued to grow as they ate. Pretty soon they were able to strip whole bushes of their berries with a single swipe of their paws. In fact, they ended up having to rip up whole bushes and eat them whole to get their sustenance. It didn't taste much different - all they knew was that they were growing above the treeline.

Pansage was the first to branch out from berries. He looked to the trees, which were all thick and green with many tasty looking leaves, and ripped some of them off the tree. Stuffing the branches into his mouth, Pansage had a massive growing spurt. His brothers paused to watch as Pansage started ripping up the forest they'd once called home and stuffing it into his mouth, growing bigger and bigger with every mouthful. Pansage grew more and more mountainous to the other two monkeys, until finally there was no foliage left in the forest. Pansage had eaten everything!

Panpour looked to a nearby lake and got an idea. She dunked her head into the lake and started drinking it up. She started growing rapidly, even more so than Pansage had! Water was much thicker than all the leaves and Panpour easily outgrew her brother. From that one lake, Panpour had grown three times bigger than Pansage, a truly mountainous size.

Pansear couldn't think of what else he could eat. He tried eating a nearby tree and found the flavor less than likeable. Then he spotted something that had been hiding underneath it - a small group of deer Pokemon. He drooped just a bit at the sight of them and grabbed them all before they could spring away, stuffing them in his mouth greedily. His growth resumed for a moment, which indicated to him that eating almost anything could probably make them grow.

That being said, Pansear remembered a nearby town. He started walking towards it, with his siblings following just behind. Logically, the whole town panicked when they saw the giant Pansear, even more so when he started grabbing and eating the townsfolk whole. Many of them tried to make a break for it but Pansear's siblings stood on either side of the town, blocking any exit routes so their brother could eat enough to catch up.

Pansear grew surprisingly fast. He hunted down every Pokemon in the town and ate mercilessly, resorted to ripping up and eating whole buildings when many of them tried to hide. Overall, Pansear grew to be between his siblings' sizes, having reduced the city to a field of dirt and rubble.

The three of them split up to find more food. Pansage made a beeline for a nearby jungle with the biggest trees he'd ever seen. Panpour picked out lakes and drank down their contents. Pansear hunted down every living creature and devoured them all, especially in towns and cities. Their growth began to accelerate - Pansage's feet were covering all the land that had been the forest before long, and Panpour was only a head shorter than him. Pansear was still the smallest among them.

Pansear was in the middle of scarfing down all the Pokemon in a sprawling city, growing all the more bigger and eating all the more Pokemon every passing moment. Pansage had to start gathering all the nature and plants he could into a pile to keep eating them efficiently, but his rapidly accelerating growth made up for it. Panpour decided to turn her attention to the ocean, which was only a few steps away from her at this point. She dipped her head in and started drinking.

Oh boy, did Panpour grow! Neither of her brothers could really describe how rapidly she increased in size. Within moments her body covered most of the land they'd cleaned up, and that was just the start. As the ocean drained into her mouth, she grew bigger and bigger - she surpassed any mountain in the region or the world - bigger and bigger and bigger still - the ocean basin began to look more like a crater. As the last of the water was sucked up, Panpour surpassed continental sizes! She was literally lying on top of the world.

Pansage and Pansear were nearly crushed by their sister's giant body, but they had avoided it. Pansage wanted to figure out a new way to grow. He tried to look for something to eat, but to no avail... then, he realized that if he was affiliated with nature, perhaps he could feast on the land itself. He went over to a nearby mountain and ripped the top off to test. He gave it a lick and found the flavor delightful - a hearty oat flavor, he thought. Pansage started tearing into the mountain, and then into the rest of the continent. His growth was about as rapid as his sister's had been, and before he was halfway done with one continent he had surpassed Panpour.

Pansear felt a bit left behind now. There were no more Pokemon to eat in the entire continent, so he had no way to grow. Panpour saw his unfortunate disposition and came up with an idea. She started digging down into the earth, the rock more like gravel by her standards, until she hit the mantle. Pansear looked and saw it more like a giant smoothie! He leaped down the hole into the lava and started drinking.

If Panpour had been growing rapidly, then Pansear surpassed all words of description. Within seconds he surpassed Panpour and Pansage, and kept on going. The two stared in awe as the meager portion within the world made him grow so rapidly. Before he was halfway done, Pansear outgrew the world entirely! When the whole world was drained of all its hot magma, Pansear was more than triple the world's size.

His siblings could only stare up in awe. Their brother had more power than either of them combined. Pansear loved his new size, but he didn't want to be alone like this. Pansage was still eating and growing, but Panpour had nothing more to eat now! No water to be had. Pansear scanned around the cosmos hoping to spot something nearby. To his relief he did see something - two gaseous planets with lots of water in the atmosphere. Perfect for Panpour. As Pansage finished consuming the world, barely the size of Pansear's foot for all he'd eaten, Pansear grabbed both of his siblings and brought them over to this new planet.

Panpour took a single look at the water-heavy planet and started literally sucking up the atmosphere. Pansage joined in on her feast and started tearing up all the land he could, consuming and devouring and growing alongside his sister. The world was slowly devoured one bit at a time, accelerating over time along with the Pans' growth. Before long, the atmosphere had been completely sucked up, leaving Panpour about half Pansear's size. Pansage ate as much of the planet's crust as he could, and when he was finished he was just a bit smaller than Panpour.

With his siblings sated for now, Pansear broke open the remains of the planet and started drinking up its mantle. Once again he loomed over his siblings as he grew so rapidly! Pansage and Panpour couldn't help but enjoy watching their brother grow. Just watching the sheer power he was gaining made them want to get him more.

A thought occurred to both of them as their brother finished consuming the planet. They told him to go and consume the sun whilst they got something else ready. Pansear was more than delighted to oblige, even though he wanted to see his siblings grow. He floated over to the massive ball of plasma and started drinking it up. It had a very unique flavor! Nothing he'd ever tasted before quite compared to the sun. Pansear grew and grew, on and on and on. Within a minute he'd outgrown the solar system, then he doubled, tripled, and quadrupled it. When he was finished drinking up the sun he was more than ten times the solar system's size!

Pansear could feel something new in him: some new power growing inside of him. Eating that star seemed to have awakened some mysterious potential in him, and he wanted to try it out. He looked for his siblings, hoping to try something on them, when he spotted them out in the galaxy they were all in. He held out his hands and tried something... He tried making his brothers grow with his newfound power. Lo and behold, they actually did grow right before his eyes!

Pansage and Panpour welcomed this new development. They grew much slower than they would have if they'd been eating, but it helped speed up what they were doing now: gathering every star in the galaxy together into one massive bundled star. When their work was done they presented it to their grateful brother, who eagerly stooped down and drank up the massive bundle of stars.

Pansear grew once more. His siblings watched in awe and enjoyment as he began to outgrow the galaxy. The fire monkey felt his power growing the more he drank, and all he could think was that he wanted so much more! It didn't take long to finish off all the stars Panpour and Pansage had gathered for him, and after that big of a meal he was a hundred times bigger than any galaxy he could see. Pansear grabbed his siblings and put them atop his head, telling them to hold on tight. Pansear started sucking up everything in the nearby universe. All the stars and galaxies flew into his mouth and made him bigger and bigger and bigger still! Panpour and Pansear watched with glee as their brother grew more powerful! They cheered him on as he kept consuming, until they were the last three entities in the entire universe.

Pansear's power had grown tremendously. His strength felt like a great fire burning with him, yearning to be released, yearning to be used, yearning to grow even bigger! Pansear was curled up in a ball, feeling some force pressing in on him from all sides. It was rather claustrophobic, so with one great motion he ripped apart this barrier - he destroyed the remains of the universe.

The three Pan pokemon were floating in the midst of the multiverse now. They couldn't help but think of themselves as gods, which they were to most respects. Pansear floated off to one of the dimensions and ripped it open, devouring everything he found inside, then he went to another universe and did the same. To Pansage, the act seemed inefficient. He had a much better idea, which he discussed with Panpour. They stopped Pansear and asked him for more power, promising him a special surprise when they were done. With this in mind, he concentrated hard and gave them as much power as he could, growing them both to be about double his size. It was quite the rush for Pansear's siblings, but they still weren't as powerful as Pansear himself.

The act exhausted Pansear and he had to rest for a while. This gave Panpour and Pansage time to enact their plan - they started gathering together every dimension in the multiverse, which wasn't hard at their size. When everything was clumped together, they used all the power they could muster to force all that food into one giant ball of glowing energy. The result was truly impressive - literally a sphere of white was sitting before them, just perfect for Pansear to consume.

Pansear woke up to a bright light, which his siblings presented to him as a gift. His heart raced with glee and he dived into the sphere, sucking it up and absorbing all it had to offer. He didn't grow... he didn't grow at all for some reason. Even as all that power drained into Pansear, he didn't seem to change size at all.

When he finished, he gave a little burp of satisfaction. Pansage and Panpour were a bit confused, but Pansear could feel what was coming. In one instant, his siblings' entire point of view became nothing but a plane of flesh. They were shocked by this sudden turn of events and looked around - all around them was a constant field of skin. They weren't even gnats to their brother - they were far, far smaller. Some force lifted them off Pansear's skin and brought them out far away so they could see him clearly. Pansear had outgrown all things - everything around them was endless white, as nothing else existed except for the three of them.

Pansear wasn't just a god. He was an elder god, a creator. Pansear loved it so much, he wanted to share this power. He held out his arms and created two spheres, one made of water and the other of earth. The two siblings immediately took their cue and started eating, drinking, devouring, growing and growing. Or at least, they grew at first, but then it tapered off until they finished their meals. A pause, and then they felt power growing in them too. The power spread through their bodies, overwhelming them for a moment before their final growing spurt took place. They grew up exactly to Pansear's size, making all three of them elder gods of equal power.

The three relished their godhood for a while. Time and space had lost all meaning to them, so for how long they enjoyed themselves they could not say. Eventually they grew bored though. They yearned to do it again, to grow in power once more. To grow many times more. With their endless power, they recreated everything they had consumed. It was no expense to their power which, again, was infinite.

Everything was put exactly the way it was before, except for them. The three hungry Pans were in their tree again, waking up to a new day. This time, though, they'd be enjoying their day a different way. They'd be playing around with their powers, growing big and changing things as they saw fit. They were gods and they had the power to do whatever they wanted.

Mostly, they chose to eat.