

So far life with an "extra brother" was a lot more exciting than it seemed, it just meant that there were a lot more wholesome moments, and that also meant helping each other out during their hard moments.

Brian although not 100% himself talked out his emotions with his brothers and as they did try their best to help him out every step of the way.

It may not have been really mentioned that much or at all at this point but Brian had a mild case of depression and anxiety that wasn't really treated that well throughout the years and his fear of blood did not really help either.