

For as long as I remember I hated working out but because of Winter on George's team we did have to work on training our powers to be able to have a chance of fighting back.

It would be a lie to say the training was making tencons to be running high, both on my side and George's side.

But after working on our powers and on uniting ourselves with George it seemed that our guilty consciences would have been relieved.

George and I worked out an agreement on how the team was going to function. He needed my team's manpower and familiarity with the darker side with the navigator on his side being very good compared to Martin who was more battle oriented.

We established the Guardians of Dreams, with George being the leader of it but I would be a secondary leader of sorts a vice president to be in charge of everyone if something were to happen to George I would step up.