

So the team had planned out the final adventure well, almost like the work of a phantom thief.

So the final dungeon was this whole grand palace that was looking like it was being constructed with it being infested with monsters like an insect to garbage.

"Alright team... let's do this"

Everyone else had nodded in unison as they prepared to go open season on whomever was the mastermind.

So it turns out the mastermind was the same ghost from the Magic fighters story but a weaker second wind of it.

It also turns out that there was a fragment of a magic crystal it was guarding with it's life for survival.

It was then noticed that it was trying to find people that naturally had traces of magic within them, which was why it wanted to so badly take down the monster fighters and luer their way into it's trap but it failed.

Upon the final problem being dealt with the team was transported outside the monster dimension by a painting in the back side of the eighth museum.

They also discovered that they were all wearing necklaces that were purple colored gems and were rather basic.

They also discovered their new best friends, and decided to keep this adventure to themselves.

However once the story was over Chester went back to the video he recorded and was going to delete it, but saved a backup of it and saved it to his hard drive with the excuse so that if it was ever accidentally uploaded that it was one of Axel's video editing projects that went way too far.

On another day they discovered that they could enter the other world as long as they were wearing their necklaces, but could not if they weren't.
