

FivebyFive:

Saiebaei: #2. Raised by Warriors, Loved by a Warrior Queen

by Xenny Diemes

A month passed, and trailing across the Chambe trail is a horde of Warriors of a new kingdom carrying a powerful warrior queen Vanarayne of Atatran a land where their generations are covered in iron, blood, sweat and persistence. They are an industrious nation slowly reviving since the days of old. Vanarayne was being carried by her subjects until she heard the faint sounds of cries coming from a distance and she orders them to turn towards the sound. Jumping out of the carrier the queen ran up to the source of the cries, falls on her knees and dug through the snow with the help of her armies helping soon. After sixteen feet of snow, Vanarayne discovers in complete shock a baby is here. Never mind that she found the baby underneath the snow or that the child is unusually large. It was from the terrifying discovery of her old rival King Huran, now an ice mummy is also found nearby which would mean the child had survived buried under ice and snow for so long.

With the help of her fellow guards Vanarayne needs to know what to do with the child since the option of turning it back to Huran's kingdom is long gone. After the deaths of both Huran and Uysa, the kingdom went through a violent struggle for power which eventually led to its collapse and absorption into Vanarayne's kingdom and the rest faded into a no-mans land. Any other ruler who sees a child of the vanquished would surely be put out of its misery but to Vanarayne, her own motherly side came through for the child as she held much of her in her strong arms. Under her decree, the Queen of Atatran declares the child as her own and shall be given a name the gods of old had wished to call her: Saiebaei. Saiebaei smiled below her new mother's bosom.

It has been twenty years to the day and Vanarayne with her own sense of tough love showed her daughter no mercy on the battlefield by throwing everything at her: swords, mallets, arrows and even scalding hot oil. The only thing that was destroyed on Saie's body were her clothes even without them, she learned how to fight hard. After the training was done the mother-daughter relationship would be as if where normal. Saie grew up and did she grow. Right now she towers over everyone that stood next to her. The largest being across the world only stood six feet tall. Saie is fifteen-eleven. Not only that but with her training and nature, her womanhood came out with a vengeance blessing her with a beyond-maiden frame packed with explosive amounts of muscle even beyond what nature can ever allow on a female. Saie more or less of a word totally ripped beyond comprehension.

Saie is beyond what any mortal can endure. During her time growing up, she had been hit by dangerous animals, taken a sword to the back while she was only ten years old. Nearly everything that would obliterate a normal person it had no effect on her. Along with her invulnerability to the point where at sometimes in her later years got into fights just to get stabbed, sliced and smashed, none of them have any effect on her. Some would think that she's a god but Saie herself doesn't believe that but her adopted mother thought so otherwise what would explain her titanic height and size. As her queen Saie will be their best weapon against the warring nations who would come after them for their precious resources and returning ancient technologies. However as a mother she would love her with all her heart and protect her if she must like Uysa never could.

Meanwhile while getting into another "play fight" with her fellow warriors, a message from the far west has befallen them. Carried on by a scout in the border across Yana, the largest single empire on the planet Atatran, all forms of communication to prevent Yana from invading Atatran for their resources and now they want to invade, kill the inhabitants and take their worth. This was the moment Saie has been waiting for so long and now it is her time to put her battle-ready body to use. Remember her training and brutal nature. Little does she know that this would be easy and with a special being overlooking from the distance will prove if she's ready for the real battle that is ahead.

To Be Continued...