SEEMS LIKE AN ETERNITY.....

Well, it's finally back. What, you may ask, is back? Why, NINJA HIGH SCHOOL of course.

After close to seven years at Eternity Comics (a division of Malibu) I've finally decided to bring the longest running Ameri-manga back to the home that spawned it. There were several factors in my decision to bring it back to Antarctic Press, but the most important was I wanted to present NHS the way I felt should have been treated.

While working at Malibu was not an unpleasant experience, I felt that they were not giving it the attention it deserved. They were busy playing around with their new Image and Ultraverse toys to be concerned with such a small potato as NHS. While they made some efforts to appease me, I came to the conclusion that I could best suit the needs of NHS.

That is why the book has not come out. While we were hammering out the negotiations for the transfer back to AP, I did not want any more stories to come out from Malibu. Now that the paperwork is over with, I can set my sights on getting the book back on schedule.

The book will start in June with no interruption of the numbering. It will start off bi-monthly so I can build a backlog of stories. Once I feel I'm far enough ahead then I'll accelerate to a monthly status again.

I want to thank everyone for being so patient with the series and hope that its return to AP will signal a new beginning. I think the fun has just begun.

Sincerely,
Ben Dunn

STATUS REPORT ON NHS: The NHS SWIMSUIT #2 is out and should be in stores. NHS PERFECT MEMORY #2 is almost near completion and should be out in March (about 4 months late). NHS #0 will also be out in March (about 2 months late, I'm afraid). The NHS CARD set will also be out in March (also 2 months late).

FOREWORD

By Kurt Wilcken

'Cuz the cat came back, the very next day
They thought he was a goner but he wouldn't stay away
You could send him off by Greyhound or else Amtrack
But still the cat came back, son
You know that the cat came back.

—Ancient Patagonian Dirge

Okay, so this title isn't strictly accurate. The critters in this story aren't really Aztecs; they're more a mish-mash of pseudo-Egyptian sorta-meso-American H. Rider Haggard by way of the late late show. The term "anthropomorphic" is also imprecise; it means "in the form of man" and refers to any non-human thing that is given human qualities. When we speak of a threatening sky or the hand of fate or when we draw a cat with breasts we are using anthropomorphism. If you want to be picky, the title should say "Anthropomorphic Amazon Animals", but then it's probably too long already anyway. There are amazons in the story, though; that part's right.

So where did the title come from? It's like this. Ages ago when Atlantis was young and the world still flat, I was a newly-graduated artguy from a university in the heart of Darkest Iowa with a portfolio full of dreams and a backpack full of handmade comic books. It was through comics that I began corresponding with Shon Howell, a creator of what he described as "fuzzy tit art". We'd bounce ideas off each other and trade sketches. Once he sent me one of a cat-girl in a loincloth crouching on a large stone skull which I thought looked like a native of the Lost Valley of the Aztec Anthropomorphic Amazons. The title just sang to me. Maybe it was the aliteration, maybe it was the multiple adjectives (this was, after all, the mid-80's, decade of the Ninja Turtles). I dunno, it just did.

One thing led to another and we wound up collaborating on a short story, "The Touch", about a tribe of warrior cat-women in the jungle. It appeared in a couple of furry 'zines. Occasionally Shon would talk about doing a sequel to "The Touch" but I didn't think it would work; I thought the Aztec Amazons were a one-joke concept and wouldn't support a longer story.

Time passed. I left Des Moines and came home. Shon left Japan and came home. You can judge which of us was the luckier. We talked about putting together an Aztec Amazons portfolio but nothing came of it. Then I got a second idea.

I expanded the tribe of amazons into a whole city isolated from the rest of civilization for centuries and stacked to the brim with gold—and the bones of unsuccessful conquistadores. I developed some of the natives of the city, introduced the traditional human explorers, and I had a story.

By this time Shon was editing furry books for Antarctic so I sent it to him. "It's a little long," he said, "But if you stretch it a little we can run it in two parts." Okay. So I did that. Then he said, "We'd like to do the story as a one-shot, but we need a little more material to fill the whole issue." "Ack," I said, "That means I'll need a third idea!"

Through briar and bramble, through the steamy jungles of an unspecified region in South America, through a hair-raising game of musical inkers, we finished the book. With all that trouble you'd think I'd be able to come up with a better title. Or at least slip in a couple genuine Aztecs, at least for appearance's sake. Ah well.

Maybe if there's a sequel....

it's an old suit.. probably second hand lots of dings, patches and seams she's carrying some kind of blaster and a knife... later she grabs the goons zap rifle.

It would probably be more practical to omit the tail... but it wouldn't look right. besides; she needs it for balance. Yeah, that's the ticket!
